

For the Convenience of Patrons We Will Be Open Saturday,
Decoration Day, from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M.

LANSBURGH & BRO

A BARGAIN OPPORTUNITY IN

Outing Waists

$1.15

For Kinds Worth
$2 and $2.50

A very low price, indeed, to pay for an outing waist. These are a delayed shipment of styles, similar to those which created such enthusiastic buying last week.

Materials are figured China silks, in very effective colorings and designs, and sheer Voile Waists, some trimmed with cluny lace, others all-over embroidered style, finished with ribbon bows in front; all made low neck, with short or long sleeves.

All sizes in any style—Main Floor—Bargain Tables, at $1.15.

SUFFRAGETTE RUNS AMUCK

Woman Smashes Windows at National Gallery.

London, May 28.—A lone militant suffragette ran amuck outside of the National Gallery today when the guards on duty there prevented her entering. She smashed several windows by hurling stones through them before she was arrested.

The suffragette window smasher was an elderly French woman, who had enlisted in the cause for which her English sisters are fighting. When she was arraigned she refused to give her name but has ranged the court in French. She was remanded for trial.

Annie Kenner, the suffragette leader, undertook a new "stunt" today in the campaign to embarrass the government. With two suffragette nurses standing guard over her, she lay flat on the pavement outside of Lambeth Palace, the residence of Archbishop of Canterbury, and refused to leave.

"I'll not move; I'll die here," she cried when she was warned that arrest would be the penalty if she did not leave the neighborhood.

BOY SLAYER ACQUITTED

Youth Who Killed School-teacher Held Inmate by Jury.

Herkimer, N. Y., May 28.—Jean Glanlin, the sixteen-year-old boy being tried for the murder of his teacher, Miss Lida Beecher, was acquitted this afternoon on the ground of insanity. The jury retired late yesterday and was deadlocked until after 2 o'clock this afternoon. Glanlin will be committed to Matteawan Hospital for the Criminal Insane, and will be taken there tomorrow.

PRESBYTERIANS BAN LIQUOR

Chicago, May 28.—The Presbyterian General Assembly has adopted a resolution demanding that all members of the church sever their connection with clubs in which liquor is served.

EMPEROR WILLIAM ILL AGAIN

Berlin, May 28.—Emperor William is ill again. While there is no cause for anxiety at present, the annual parade of the Potsdam guards was postponed today because of the Kaiser's indisposition.

Getting a Start

FOOD

A great scientist once said, "Tell me what the people eat, and I will tell you what they are."

Man does not live by food alone, but without it he does not live at all. Probably 90 per cent of all illness and incapacity for work, barring accidents, is due to insufficient food, improper food, or overeating.

I do not propose to present a treatise upon food or the chemistry of nutrients, but a few general remarks upon the subject, even from a layman, may be of value, especially to young people who do not realize that the food indiscretions of youth lay the foundation of premature age and impaired faculties.

The average dinner pail and lunch basket are indigestion's accomplices. Usually they contain pie, doughnuts, or cake, and other mixtures which neither feed the body nor allow it to administer to the mind.

The quick-lunch counter is a menace to health, and some time, perhaps, we shall be sufficiently civilized to legislate against it. Thousands, yes, hundreds of thousands, of people confine their lunch to a piece of pie or some "medley" of food, washed down with a cup of coffee or tea, and then they wonder why they don't feel like working.

Half of the workers eat a hurried breakfast, swallowing food whole, which should be masticated, and then rush for a train or run half of the way to the factory or office.

Good nourishing food in itself is not sufficient. Much depends on the way it is eaten, and more than very moderate exercise should not immediately follow a meal.

The human body may be likened to an engine or boiler, and every engineer knows that the uncared for machine wears out a dozen times more quickly than it would if it were given proper attention.

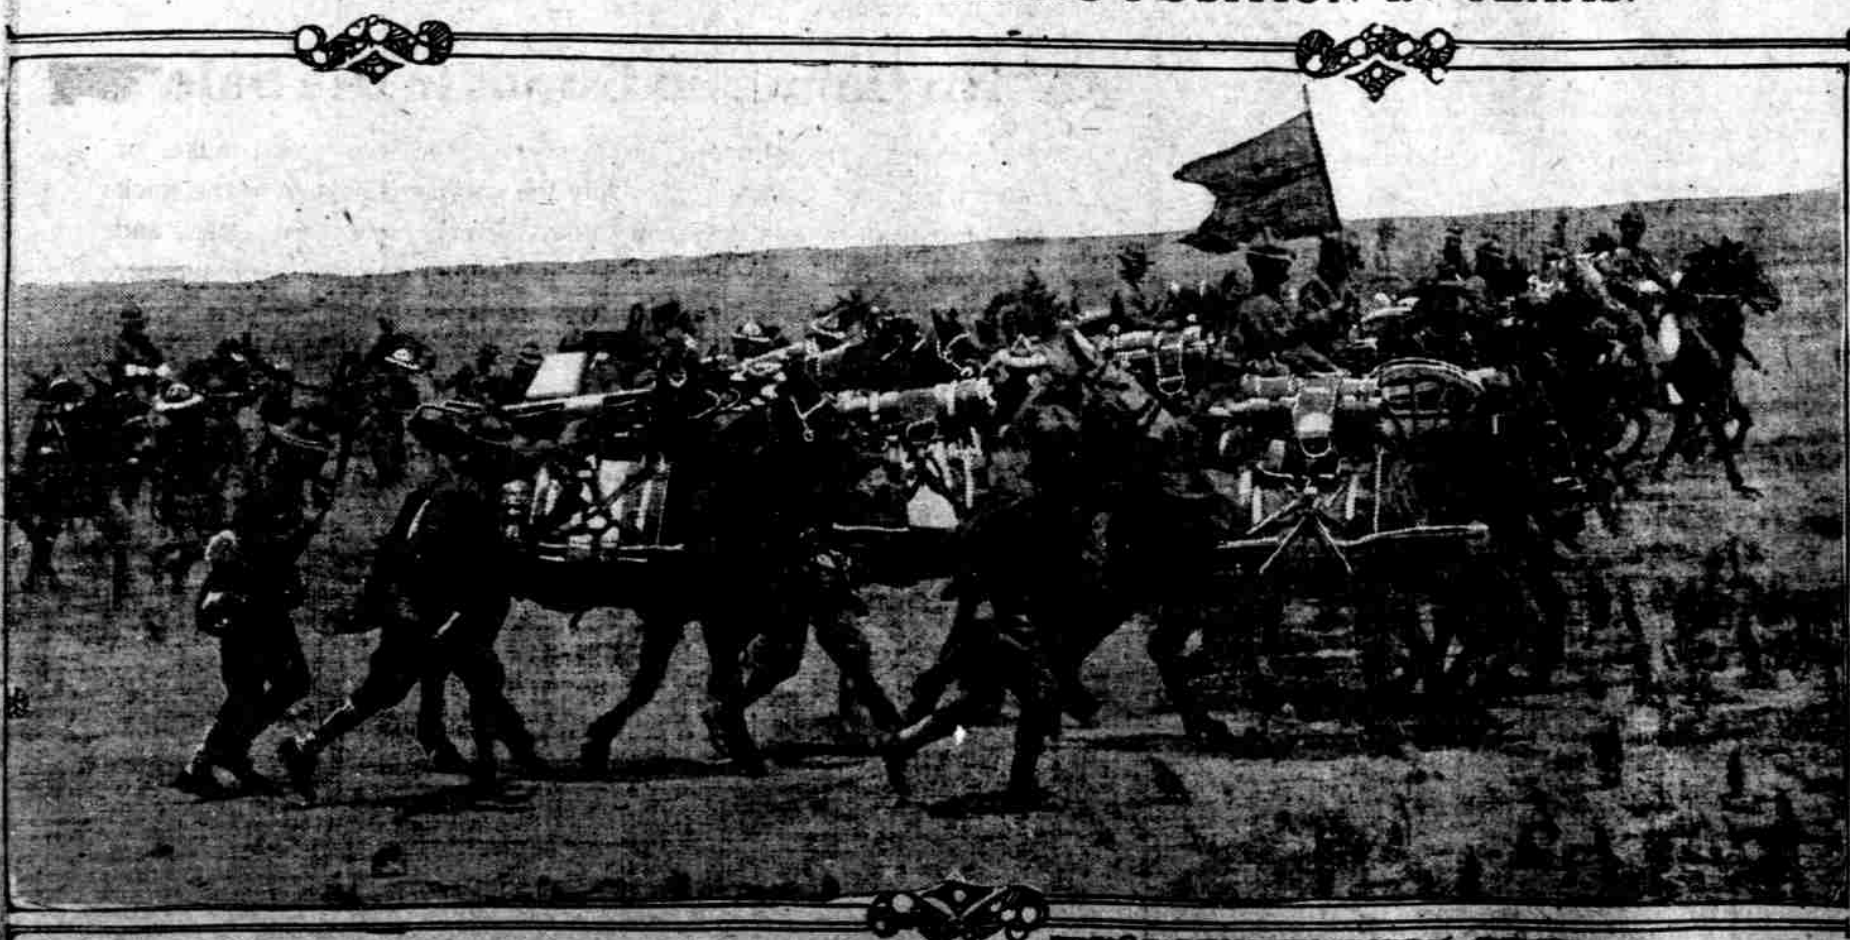

You cannot run the body any more than you can run an engine, without constant care; and, if you don't give it this attention, you have no right to expect it to perform its functions. I should advise every one, whether he works for a living or not, to consult a reputable physician and ask him to prescribe the foods best adapted to one's individual case.

Be very frank with your doctor. Tell him your life's history and your occupation, that he may be able to advise you intelligently. This does not mean that you will be obliged to diet or discard all of the foods which appetite craves.

You can't do your work properly, you can't be on good terms with your occupation, that he may be able to advise you intelligently. This does not mean that you will be obliged to diet or discard all of the foods which appetite craves.

Don't labor under the delusion that because you have not had indigestion you are eating the proper food. Indigestion is often a long time coming; but any abuse of the digestive organs, or any other part of the body, will react against you sooner or later. Nature is just, and will always exact a penalty from those who, either innocently or intentionally, break her laws.

FOURTH FIELD ARTILLERY TAKING POSITION IN TEXAS.

This photograph shows a military battery in action, at Galveston, where the First Division has been mobilized. The battery is being transported to Vera Cruz to reinforce Pancho Villa's forces.

MICHIGAN LODGE SENDS MONEY FOR MEMORIAL

Masons Contribute $5,000 Toward Temple to Honor Washington.

LARGEST THUS FAR RECEIVED

Alexandria, Va., May 28.—The first Grand Lodge of Masons in the United States to make an appropriation toward the building of the George Washington Masonic Memorial Association, which it is proposed to erect here, is the Grand Lodge of Michigan. That lodge contributed $5,000 to the project. This is also the largest single contribution received thus far.

News of the action of the Michigan Masons was received by Charles H. Callahan, secretary of the local committee, in a telegram today from Flint, Mich., from William M. Perrett, grand master, Michigan; J. E. Dillon, past grand master, the latter representing the memorial association.

In view of the fact that this is the first Grand Lodge in the United States to contribute to the fund, it is expected that other Grand Lodges will take similar action. Should they all do so the erection of the temple within the next two years is assured.

This project was also recently endorsed by the Grand Masters' Association of the United States in session in St. Louis.

The proposed temple will cost $1,000,000. It is proposed to erect it in Alexandria as a permanent memorial to Washington, the Mason. In it will be stored the priceless relics of Washington and other distinguished members of the fraternity now in the possession of Alexandria-Washington Lodge of Masons.

The association is composed of grand masters and past grand masters from different sections of the country. The first meeting was held here February 22, 1913, and every February they assemble here and discuss plans for its erection and the various committees make reports.

In the Corporation Court today in the case of Miss M. Blanche Rotchford and others, a decree was entered enjoining E. C. Dunn, city engineer, from issuing a permit for frame buildings in the rear of 1007 Queen street unless the consent of city council has been had and approved. The decree further directs that Mr. Priest remove two sheds in the rear of 1007 Queen street within a period of thirty days.

Members of Old Dominion Commandery, No. 11, Knights Templar, headed by the American Indian Guard Band, will march from the Masonic Temple tomorrow night to Armory Hall where the annual inspection of that organization will be made. The commandery will be in charge of Chester A. Quinn, commander.

Dr. Charles T. Lindsey, right eminent commander of the District of Columbia, will attend.

The annual banquet will follow the inspection. It will take place at the Young People's Building, and will be attended by 200, including the six knights, and ladies.

The sum of $300 was added to the Alexandria Hospital building fund today, bringing the total subscriptions up to $23,315.97.

Among the contributions received today were the following: H. J. Simpson and Son, $100; Charles B. Marshall, $100; Garrett and Monroe, $50; Frank Armstrong and H. N. Koblegard, $50. The campaign for raising contributions will end Saturday.

A report of the proceedings of the recent state convention of the Knights of Columbus, held in Newport News, Va., was made last night at a meeting of Fitzgerald Council, K. C. held in St. Mary's Hall.

Mrs. Katie Johnson, thirty-four years old, died last night at the Alexandria Hospital. She lived near Sharon Church, Fairfax County. Her funeral will take place at 11 o'clock Sunday from Sharon Church.

In the Corporation Court today a decree for divorce was given in the case of Philip M. Knox from his wife, Cornelia H. Knox. The ground is desertion. The complainant was awarded the custody of the oldest child, Cornelia Knox, and the complainant given custody of the youngest daughter, Josephine H. Knox, until further order of the court.

The funeral of Jacob M. Hethley took place this afternoon from the residence of his nephew, P. E. Ludwig, North Broadrock Station, Alexandria County. Services were conducted by Rev. Fredrick Gunnell, of Washington. Burial was in St. Paul's Cemetery.

Miss Minnie Padgett's funeral took place this morning from St. Mary's Catholic Church. Services were conducted by Rev. H. J. Cutler, and burial was in St. Mary's Cemetery.

Last rites for Miss Harriett Johnson were held at 5 o'clock this afternoon at Wheatley's undertaking chapel. They were conducted by Rev. O. W. Triplett, pastor of the Second Baptist Church. Burial was in the Methodist Protestant Cemetery.

DR. MARDEN'S UPLIFT TALKS

PULLING TOGETHER

By ORISON SWETT MARDEN. (Copyright, 1914.)

The distressing conditions in the east and other regions of Colorado which compelled the sending of Federal troops to the scene of strife to quell a formidable rebellion have again brought to the attention of the public the absolute necessity for co-operation between capital and labor.

No employer today is independent of the workers in his service. He cannot succeed alone, no matter how great his ability or capital. Business today is more than ever a question of co-operation. The most progressive employers look upon their employees as partners. They do not take great risks, but so far as the success of the business is concerned they are partners. No man is strong enough to succeed in any large way without this co-operation.

Business men are beginning to find that there is a tremendous loss of productivity because the employer and employee do not pull together. If the employers and employees of this country worked together, hand and glove, worked together as partners, as having the same interests at stake, instead of feeling that there is a chasm between them, that their interests are not identical, there would be such a tremendous increase of productivity as would cause an industrial revolution.

It is unfortunate for the employees, that in trying to protect themselves, as in the various unions, they naturally emphasize this difference between the employer and the employee. They unconsciously tend to widen the chasm between them, when there should be no chasm.

Lincoln said, "A house divided against itself must fall." If the employers and employees of an institution spend their time in arguing and wrangling, it means a divided house, and the house will certainly suffer.

There is a great deal of difference between the strength of a lot of wires that are twisted into a cable and the same number of separate wires.

The employer and employee in many concerns are like the many fine wires twisted into a mighty cable, capable of supporting a tremendous weight. If other business houses they are like many separate wires. There is no unity of purpose. Every one is for himself, looking out for his own interest, caring nothing for the interest of others.

I know of no one thing that will pay a man more than to work in co-operation between himself and his employees.

There is an enormous amount of ability which goes to waste and is never developed in many of our large business houses because of this lack of hearty co-operation between the heads of departments and the employees, for the reason that the proprietor never took pains to arouse their ambition and call out their ability.

One of the great financiers says: "Labor and capital should never be arrayed against each other. The solution is in profit sharing. It should be so arranged that every employee would participate in the profits. I think that in this way the greatest step to prevent dissension between labor and capital would be taken."

Business men are waking up to the importance of conservation of human energy. Employers and employees of the future will come together as never before. They are finding out that their interests are identical, and that no man can rise to great eminence in business today except on the principle of co-operation.

Dr. Marden's Uplift Talks will appear in the magazine page of this paper every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday.

MEAT IMPORTS TRIVIAL

From a dispatch printed the other day, it would seem as though the corn crop of Argentina would not be superabundant. This, if it proves true, will remove one of the apprehensions of the political economists, who feared the fate of the farmers since the bars were let down.

At the best, or worst, they averaged the product of about 6,000 cattle a week, which is equivalent to 6 per cent of the output of the five principal dressed beef concerns and only about 3.5 per cent of that of the country. Most of it, also, was frozen, and, therefore, went to cold storage, whence it was taken out for provisioning the navy. What was simply refrigerated, or "chilled," went into market, but did not compare with American meat in quality or sell as well.

As an experiment, Argentine meat imports had a value. As a competitive proposition they have never been seriously considered.—New York Times.

Dr. Marden's Uplift Talks will appear in the magazine page of this paper every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday.

Dr. Marden's Uplift Talks will appear in the magazine page of this paper every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday.

THIS IS THE HOUSE

To Be Given Away
FREE
Tomorrow, Saturday,
May 30th
Between 2:30 and 6 P. M.

An Equity in a House and Lot AND 20 Shares in the Gretta Electric Railroad

Tomorrow, Saturday, May 30, from 2:30 to 6 p. m., we will hold an auction sale of lots in the Gretta Addition to Riverdale, and at that time we shall give away absolutely free, an equity in a house and lot located in Gretta Addition; also one share of stock in the Gretta Electric Railroad, to each of the first 20 purchasers paying $50 on account of the purchase of lots on the day of sale. Balance may be paid $5.00 monthly.

The Gretta Electric Railroad gives direct service between Washington and this fast-developing new suburb. Don't fail to attend this

Auction Sale of Lots in the Gretta Addition to Riverdale

The Gretta Addition to Riverdale is an excellent location for a home as well as being a safe and sound investment opportunity of unusual promise. It is situated directly on one electric line and within ten minutes of another. Convenient to schools, churches, and stores. You can have gas, electric light, and other city conveniences, combined with the beauty and peacefulness of country air and surroundings, and the privilege of voting.

Free Special Cars Will Leave 15th and H Streets
Northeast at 2 P. M., Going Direct to the Grounds

THOMAS J. OWEN & SON, Auctioneers
FOR FULL PARTICULARS SEE
JAMES A. DULANEY, Sales Manager, 820-821 Riggs Building

DAILY SHORT STORY.

TWO CONVERTS.

By A. MARIA CRAWFORD.
(Copyright, 1914.)

"Don't ask me what he said, Eleanor. I don't like to carry tales."

"But I would rather know, Aunt Phoebe," said the pretty girl curried up on the couch. "It simplifies matters for me."

"How?"

"Because if it is an honest prejudice, I'll overcome it; otherwise, I won't allow myself to think any more about him."

"I am afraid," said Aunt Phoebe, seriously, "you have allowed yourself to fall in love with man who was merely polite to you on the train."

Eleanor flushed. "That isn't quite fair, auntie, dear. I only remarked when I came that he was the most attractive looking man I ever saw. I stumbled on my way to the dinner and he helped me. He was so kind to me. He lifted his hat. That was all there was to the incident."

"Now, my dear, when you first came, you pointed him out to me and was delighted when you found that I knew him. How did you know what kind of a voice Shirley Spence has if you had never heard it?"

Aunt Phoebe, shaking her finger at Eleanor, was instantly suspicious.

"Didn't I hear him talking to a man who sat with him in the diner. But to get back to my original question, why won't he call on me? Every other woman in your particular set has been here."

"Shirley could not do that," said Eleanor. "He was engaged to be married to a beautiful girl and she jilted him."

"How could she?"

"She married the other man, without mentioning the matter to Shirley. It made him a little bitter. I think. Women have spoiled him all his life. That was why he took his love affair so seriously."

"He was engaged to be married to a beautiful girl and she jilted him."

who sat with him in the diner. But to get back to my original question, why won't he call on me? Every other woman in your particular set has been here."

"Shirley could not do that," said Eleanor. "He was engaged to be married to a beautiful girl and she jilted him."

"How could she?"

"She married the other man, without mentioning the matter to Shirley. It made him a little bitter. I think. Women have spoiled him all his life. That was why he took his love affair so seriously."

"He was engaged to be married to a beautiful girl and she jilted him."

"How could she?"

"She married the other man, without mentioning the matter to Shirley. It made him a little bitter. I think. Women have spoiled him all his life. That was why he took his love affair so seriously."

"He was engaged to be married to a beautiful girl and she jilted him."

"How could she?"

"She married the other man, without mentioning the matter to Shirley. It made him a little bitter. I think. Women have spoiled him all his life. That was why he took his love affair so seriously."

"He was engaged to be married to a beautiful girl and she jilted him."

"How could she?"

"She married the other man, without mentioning the matter to Shirley. It made him a little bitter. I think. Women have spoiled him all his life. That was why he took his love affair so seriously."

"He was engaged to be married to a beautiful girl and she jilted him."

"How could she?"

all the other girls he knew. Then she thought of Shirley Spence and the singular attraction he had for her when she had only spoken to him once in the train. Could that be love? It was measured by heart beats. Every throb of my heart until you are really mine seems an eternity to me. That is how well I love you. Oh, girl, don't you see, don't you know? I've suffered enough, surely, to be able to reach hungry arms to you."

Eleanor turned and looked in his eyes. There was something compelling in his face and she felt herself drawn toward him.

"Aunt Phoebe says that you have always been studied by women, and I suppose I will have to spoil you, too," she laughed and knew that love at first sight, although she had ridiculed it all her life, had two more converts in the world that night.

"I have known you such a short time," she tried to argue.

"Love is not measured by hours and days and months and years, dear. It is measured by heart beats. Every throb of my heart until you are really mine seems an eternity to me. That is how well I love you. Oh, girl, don't you see, don't you know? I've suffered enough, surely, to be able to reach hungry arms to you."

Eleanor turned and looked in his eyes. There was something compelling in his face and she felt herself drawn toward him.

"Aunt Phoebe says that you have always been studied by women, and I suppose I will have to spoil you, too," she laughed and knew that love at first sight, although she had ridiculed it all her life, had two more converts in the world that night.

"I have known you such a short time," she tried to argue.

"Love is not measured by hours and days and months and years, dear. It is measured by heart beats. Every throb of my heart until you are really mine seems an eternity to me. That is how well I love you. Oh, girl, don't you see, don't you know? I've suffered enough, surely, to be able to reach hungry arms to you."

Eleanor turned and looked in his eyes. There was something compelling in his face and she felt herself drawn toward him.

"Aunt Phoebe says that you have always been studied by women, and I suppose I will have to spoil you, too," she laughed and knew that love at first sight, although she had ridiculed it all her life, had two more converts in the world that night.

"I have known you such a short time," she tried to argue.

"Love is not measured by hours and days and months and years, dear. It is measured by heart beats. Every throb of my heart until you are really mine seems an eternity to me. That is how well I love you. Oh, girl, don't you see, don't you know? I've suffered enough, surely, to be able to reach hungry arms to you."

Eleanor turned and looked in his eyes. There was something compelling in his face and she felt herself drawn toward him.

"Aunt Phoebe says that you have always been studied by women, and I suppose I will have to spoil you, too," she laughed and knew that love at first sight, although she had ridiculed it all her life, had two more converts in the world that night.

"I have known you such a short time," she tried to argue.

"Love is not measured by hours and days and months and years, dear. It is measured by heart beats. Every throb of my heart until you are really mine seems an eternity to me. That is how well I love you. Oh, girl, don't you see, don't you know? I've suffered enough, surely, to be able to reach hungry arms to you."

Eleanor turned and looked in his eyes. There was something compelling in his face and she felt herself drawn toward him.

"Aunt Phoebe says that you have always been studied by women, and I suppose I will have to spoil you, too," she laughed and knew that love at first sight, although she had ridiculed it all her life, had two more converts in the world that night.

"I have known you such a short time," she tried to argue.

"Love is not measured by hours and days and months and years, dear. It is measured by heart beats. Every throb of my heart until you are really mine seems an eternity to me. That is how well I love you. Oh, girl, don't you see, don't you know? I've suffered enough, surely, to be able to reach hungry arms to you."

Eleanor turned and looked in his eyes. There was something compelling in his face and she felt herself drawn toward him.

"Aunt Phoebe says that you have always been studied by women, and I suppose I will have to spoil you, too," she laughed and knew that love at first sight, although she had ridiculed it all her life, had two more converts in the world that night.

"I have known you such a short time," she tried to argue.

"Love is not measured by hours and days and months and years, dear. It is measured by heart beats. Every throb of my heart until you are really mine seems an eternity to me. That is how well I love you. Oh, girl, don't you see, don't you know? I've suffered enough, surely, to be able to reach hungry arms to you."

Eleanor turned and looked in his eyes. There was something compelling in his face and she felt herself drawn toward him.

"Aunt Phoebe says that you have always been studied by women, and I suppose I will have to spoil you, too," she laughed and knew that love at first sight, although she had ridiculed it all her life, had two more converts in the world that night.

"I have known you such a short time," she tried to argue.

"Love is not measured by hours and days and months and years, dear. It is measured by heart beats. Every throb of my heart until you are really mine seems an eternity to me. That is how well I love you. Oh, girl, don't you see, don't you know? I've suffered enough, surely, to be able to reach hungry arms to you."

Eleanor turned and looked in his eyes. There was something compelling in his face and she felt herself drawn toward him.

Chesapeake Beach

ON THE BAY
SEASON OPENS
(DECORATION DAY)

MAY 30

Spend the day where the cool
Salt Water Breeze is ever present.
All Popular Amusements at Popular Prices.

New Pier Affords Unexcelled
Crabbing and Fishing.
Free Dancing.

Excellent Hotel and Cafe Service.
Salt Water Bathing.

ROUND TRIP
RATES
WEEK
DAYS 25c
SUNDAYS &
HOLIDAYS 50c

TRAIN SCHEDULE IN R. R. COLUMN.
For additional information, phone Lincoln 1629.

